Life after retirement

Andrew Notley

Kathy Day has more time for scuba diving and bartending since she retired as a mail dispatcher at the South Central Letter Processing Plant in Toronto with 42 years of service behind her. On December 30, 2006, she became the 10,000th person to retire since the start of the Canada Post pension plan on October 1, 2000. She says the retirement process was very easy: All she had to do was sign the papers and she could retire worry-free.

"It's one of the best pension plans in Canada," says Laurie Ryan, manager, Pension Centre. "It's there until the day you die – and beyond if you have survivors." This plan takes care of retirees by allowing them to set their post-work lifestyles with confidence. They'll always know how much they're getting and when. For more details, the annual pension plan report and Personalized Pension Statements will become available this spring.

As for Day, retirement doesn't equal slowing down. When she's not scuba diving in the Bahamas, she manages and bartends at her restaurant – The Junction – in Scarborough, Ontario. Sometimes, she says, it doesn't feel like retirement, because her "postie-friends are always dropping in to visit."

"Retirement's been great, but I can't just sit at home," she adds. "I've got too much energy."

DID YOU KNOW... that the 2007 Federal Budget has implemented a change to the maximum retirement age?

Effective as of the 2007 calendar year, the age at which payments must commence under RPPs (includes the Canada Post Registered Pension Plan), Deferred Profit Sharing Plans (DPSPs) and Registered Retirement Savings Plans (RRSPs) will be increased from age 69 to age 71.

Pension Income splitting

In our January 2007 edition of intouch, we advised you that the Federal Minister of Finance had proposed legislation that would allow Canadian residents in receipt of pension income to split their retirement income as of the 2007 taxation year. This bill has now been passed and details of how this will be treated are as follows:

Spouses will need to complete and file an "Annual Joint Election" form with the Canada Revenue Agency. The form will automatically be included with annual tax returns. When preparing income tax returns, retirees will be responsible for determining the optimal amount of pension income that should be transferred to their spouse, taking into account tax brackets, various tax credits (including credits that can be transferred between spouses) and OAS refund rules.
